Has your credit history prevented you from gaining employment, obtaining new credit, or even purchasing insurance?

Bad credit can wreak havoc on the best laid plans. But, you can become creditworthy once again.

5 STEPS TO CREDITWORTHINESS

1. Order your credit reports
2. Examine your reports
3. Dispute errors
4. Plan and payoff debt
5. Build a positive credit history

Order your Credit Reports

Find out what the three credit reporting bureaus are saying about you. Each may be slightly different, but those differences may need attention. Creditors do not have to report to all three credit bureaus. If you order a report from just one of the credit reporting bureaus, you are wasting time and money. If you have been denied credit, insurance, or employment because of your report, you are entitled to a free report from the reporting agency. The company you applied to must supply you with the name, address and phone number for the credit reporting bureaus used. You have 60 days to request your free report.

Examine your reports

Examine your reports because there may be errors on them. The credit reporting bureaus only generate reports, and do not verify the information they receive from creditors. Reviewing the information for accuracy is your job. Be meticulous in disputing errors.

If the negative information reported is true, only time, and changing your credit habits can make a difference. Late payments and paid charge off accounts will remain on your credit reports for up to seven years. Bankruptcies remain on your reports for up to 10 years. Payment history patterns are what credit grantors focus on, not one time occurrences. Consistent on time payments are what will improve your reports.

Dispute errors

If you do not dispute errors, your reports will cost you money and possible opportunities. You must be thorough when disputing. Make sure to fill out the dispute form provided by the credit reporting bureau. Clearly document each mistake and state why it is wrong. Include copies of any supporting documentation. The credit reporting bureaus must investigate any relevant disputes within 30 days of receiving your dispute. Sometimes you need to contact the creditor directly to get them to report the correct information. After the disputes are investigated by the credit reporting bureaus, they will mail you an updated copy of your credit report.

Plan and payoff debt

Resolve to payoff your debt by devising a plan. If you are having difficulty making payments, you may need to call your creditors to discuss your options. Do not ignore collection agencies. Paid collections accounts are much better than unpaid. Negotiate settlements on collection accounts to reduce the amount owed and to improve the reporting status.

Slowly close unneeded or unused credit accounts. Do not close too many accounts in a short period of time, as this can have a negative impact on your credit rating. Pay your debts on time and try to get them paid off as soon as you can. These two steps can account for almost two thirds of your credit score.

Build a positive credit history

You need positive history and stability on your credit reports. Make sure all your credit accounts are being reported. You may have been denied credit of employment due to not having any credit history. However you may have credit history that is not being reported. You can ask the credit grantors to report your account information to the credit bureaus. If you have filed bankruptcy, rebuild your credit as soon as you can.
